Evan Goldman is an artist currently focusing on painting realistic portraits, landscapes, cityscapes, and nude figures. He grew up in Bethesda, Maryland where, as a teenager, he began painting with Walt Bartman at the Yellow Barn Studio in Glen Echo Park, Maryland. As a student at Walt Whitman High School he won numerous awards for his paintings and was named a Presidential Scholar in the Arts in 1999. During his high school years he traveled with Walt Bartman and his students on art workshops in Italy, France, and Greece.

Evan earned a BFA in Painting from the Maryland Institute College of Art in 2003 where he also studied illustration and video production. He also painted in Israel and Holland through programs run by Maryland Institute College of Art. In 2004 he enrolled at the New York Academy of Art in order to gain a better understanding of realist painting techniques and concepts. Evan received his MFA in Painting from the New York Academy of Art in 2006. During the summer of 2006 he traveled to Norway to study under one of his favorite painters, Odd Nerdrum. Evan also studied under the renowned figurative artist, Robert Liberace, at the Art Students League in Alexandria, Virginia. These experiences have led him to pursue an artistic direction strongly influenced by the current classical realist movement.

Evan's artwork has been exhibited in New York City, Philadelphia, Detroit, Washington DC, Baltimore, and Glen Echo, Maryland. His paintings hang in collections throughout Maryland and the Washington DC area. The Google Corporation's Co-Founder, Larry Page, who is based in California, also owns one of Evan's paintings. During the autumn of 2009, Evan began teaching portrait painting and drawing at the Yellow Barn Studio. He will be having a solo show, featuring scenes of downtown Bethesda, at the Orchard Gallery in Bethesda from March 5th to 25th, 2010.
